

Dear ma'am,

It has been quite intriguing for me to watch my daughter, argue with me as to why she should not miss school, specially since we used to jump at whatever small excuse we could find to skip school during our growing up days. As most parents would, we keep taking feedback from Prisha on the various school activities and also on the conduct of teachers and fellow students and as usual Prisha would always praise the school and its teachers, teaching methods, activity classes, the encouragements and the list could go on. Even though we observed a very steady progress in her all round skills ever since she became a Sriian, all this was becoming a bit too much and I wondered that maybe, she was exaggerating and was very difficult to understand that how can she be so appreciative of her school, as we too had been to good schools but always had complaints ready.

Then corona pandemic happened, and very swiftly virtual classes were started. It was a very new concept and the numerous doubts and reservations we might have had regarding it, were set aside and we saw how quickly everyone transitioned from the real to the virtual world. Thanks to the school for the very swift conceptualization and effective implementation of the same. On top of it, we as parents were getting to see first hand how beautifully all the subjects were being taught. I must make a special mention of you, Tabassum ma'am, you have been a great teacher and mentor and have had a very profound impact on Prisha. We understood from where all that appreciation was coming from as we could see it happening in front of us, so Prisha was not exaggerating, and also understood the reason why she does not want to miss school. All other subject teachers were also very good and worth appreciating and very meticulous in their teaching methods. Unlike other students, Prisha devotes a lot of hours to her badminton and fitness class which leaves her with relatively less time for studies. But by attending regular online classes which were conducted so nicely and studying on her own she has done pretty well. I think looking at the success of the online classes, the school should not completely do away with the virtual classes in the days to come, it has been really effective and we completely support it.

I thank all the teachers, Mrs. Bansal and principal ma'am for making the wonder years of the student's really wonderful and can only wish that we too had a school and teachers like you in our formative years.
